Billy Bones and his Sea Chest

- ▶ 2 Jim Hawkins lived with his mother and father in an inn¹ called the 'Admiral Benbow'. It was in a seaside village in south-west England.

One day an old seaman² arrived at the inn with a big heavy chest³. He had a white scar⁴ on his face and looked very fierce.

He drank a glass of rum. Then he asked for a room and said:

'I like it here. It's quiet and I can watch the ships.'

His name was Billy Bones. Every day he looked out to sea through his brass telescope. He didn't speak much, but every night he asked the same question:

'Did any seamen come today?'

One day he called Jim Hawkins and said:

'I will give you a penny my boy if you tell me when a seaman with one leg comes to this inn.'

'Of course!' said Jim, happy to earn a penny. ■

Then, one morning in January, a strange man arrived at the inn.

Jim was laying¹ the table for breakfast and looked up as the man came in. His face was thin and grey. Then Jim noticed his left hand. He had only three fingers.

‘I wonder if Billy Bones will give me my penny for a man with three fingers instead of one leg,’ he thought.

‘Come here boy,’ said the man. ‘Tell me, is this Billy Bones’ table?’

‘Yes,’ answered Jim, ‘but he’s walking on the cliffs² at the moment. You can wait for him here.’

‘Good idea boy!’ said the man and sat down to wait.

When Billy Bones returned from his walk and saw the man he wasn’t very happy.

‘Black Dog!’ he said. ‘What are you doing here?’

‘Aren’t you pleased³ to see an old shipmate⁴?’ asked Black Dog.

Jim left the two men to speak in private. Then there was a loud CRASH! When he went back into the room, Billy Bones was lying on the floor and Black Dog was gone.

Luckily Billy Bones was not dead, but he had to stay in bed for a long time after his fight with his ‘old friend’ Black Dog.

During this time, Jim cared for the old man and one day Billy said: ‘You are always kind to me Jim, so now I’ll tell you a secret.’

Jim sat on the bed and listened carefully.

‘Do you remember Black Dog?’

‘Of course!’ answered Jim.

‘Well, he’s a bad man and there are lots more like¹ him who want to see me dead!’

‘But why?’ asked Jim.

‘They want my old sea chest. We were all members of Captain Flint’s crew²,’ he continued.

‘Who’s Captain Flint?’ asked Jim.

‘Captain Flint! He was a famous pirate and we had lots of adventures together!’

Jim was so surprised that he couldn’t say a word.

‘Don’t be afraid Jim, my pirate days are over³. But I need your help now. When I die, you mustn’t let⁴ the others take my sea chest. Promise!’

‘Ok, I promise, but what’s inside the sea chest?’

‘You’ll see when you open it,’ was all Billy said.

One afternoon, a blind¹ man arrived at the inn and asked for Billy Bones. Jim took him to Billy's table. The two men said nothing, but the blind man gave Billy a note² and left quickly.

'Who was that?' asked Jim.

But Billy didn't answer. He looked at the note. His face went very white, then he said:

'Ten o'clock! Quick Jim we have six hours...'

He stood up, then fell to the floor... dead!

Jim stared at the dead man, too shocked to cry.

Then he remembered his promise to Billy.

'The sea chest!' he exclaimed, 'Ten o'clock, six hours!' and he ran upstairs to Billy's room.

The sea chest was under the window. Jim opened it slowly. Inside there were two pistols, an old Spanish watch, a compass and some shells.

Then in the corner of the chest, Jim found a small bag of coins and a long package³. He put everything into a bag and thought:

'I must hide⁴ everything before the blind man and his friends come back.'

So, he took his bag and quietly left the inn.

It was night now and there was a full moon. Jim started to walk to the next village. Just as he reached a bridge, he heard a noise and looked back. Not far behind, he could see some men with lanterns¹. They were coming towards him. He thought quickly. Instead of crossing the bridge, he hid under it.

Soon the men arrived at the bridge. One of them was the blind man.

‘I can’t see the boy anywhere, Pew,’ said one of the buccaneers² to the blind man.

‘You’re not the only one!’ exclaimed Pew.

‘We must find him. He has the map that was in the chest,’ continued Pew. ‘Remember, if we find the map, we will be as rich as kings!’

Under the bridge, Jim listened and was scared³ and excited at the same time.

Then they heard horses coming from the village. The men ran away and left blind Pew in the middle of the road. The horse hit Pew as it came over the bridge. He died instantly.

The rider⁴, Doctor Livesey, got off his horse.

magistrate and Jim knew him well. The doctor took him to his house and Jim told him his story.

‘So, Jim,’ said the doctor, ‘where’s the map?’

‘Here it is, Sir,’ said Jim as he gave the doctor the package. The doctor looked at it for a long time but did not open it. Instead he said:

‘You must be hungry Jim. Stay for dinner!’

‘Oh thank you Sir,’ said Jim.

Mr. Trelawney, the squire¹, was also at the dinner and while they ate, the two men told Jim the story of Captain Flint.

‘Flint was a terrible pirate. Before dying, he buried² his treasure in a secret place,’ they said.

‘But now we have the map, thanks to you Jim!’ said the doctor.

They opened the package. Inside there was a map of an island with three red crosses³ and ‘treasure here’ written near one of them.

‘Right, tomorrow I’m going to buy a ship⁴,’ said the squire, ‘and we will sail to the island!’

‘And find the treasure!’ said the doctor and Jim.
